Anthony Bailey called his estranged wife at work Tuesday night with an order: "Watch the news tonight."

An hour later, police say, Bailey took a 12-gauge shotgun to his four children and started shooting. By the time he was done, three children were dead and one was gasping for life.

Bailey, 37, then set a small fire and fled the northwest Detroit home, leaving the children behind and a shotgun leaning against the house, police said.

"My daddy did it," 9-year-old Antonia Bailey later told police as she dipped in and out of consciousness at a hospital.

Her older sister, Sharnice, 11, was dead of three gunshot wounds to the neck and leg; her younger sister, Ayana, 3, was dead of a gunshot to the head, and brother Lamar, 1, was dead of a gunshot wound to the shoulder.

On Wednesday, a police task force of more than 70 officers captured Anthony Bailey, and young Antonia struggled to understand.

"She just asked, 'Why?' " said her stepsister, Iesha Brassell, 21. "That's it. 'Why?' She was responding to me."

The break in the case came at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday, when police spotted a despondent man walking on the Greenfield overpass over I-96.

The man initially gave investigators a false name but eventually identified himself as Anthony Bailey, said Inspector Marilyn Hall-Beard of the Detroit Police homicide section.

Bailey was charged with three counts of first-degree felony murder, one count of assault with intent to murder and arson. He is expected to be arraigned today in Detroit's 36th District Court.

Antonia was in critical but stable condition at Children's Hospital on Wednesday.

"Right now, what we should do as a community is pray for little Antonia," Hall-Beard said.

Brassell said Antonia is "real strong right now. She's OK. She's going to make it."

At Pitcher Elementary School, several blocks from the children's Ashton Avenue home, teachers preparing for the school year hugged, wept and searched for answers to Antonia's question.

"Why would a man who loves his children and was so interested in them do something like this?" said Judith Bryant, who taught Antonia last year in fourth grade, and Sharnice the previous year. "I just can't comprehend this."

Several teachers and principal Carol Garland called the girls model students who were involved in student council, earned high grades and were excellent readers and writers. They said the girls' father was proactive in their education and had high aspirations for them.

He spoke of turning them into his own version of the tennis superstar sisters, Serena and Venus Williams.

"He stressed their knowledge of computers," Bryant said. "I don't even know if they had computers at home, but they sure knew how to run them."

If there were warning signs of problems at home, Bryant said, she didn't see them. But Bailey's stepfather, David Bradley, did.

He said his stepson, whom he'd raised since infancy, became depressed and withdrawn about four months ago when his wife of 12 years, Essie Bailey, 40, left. Bradley said his stepson would leave the children alone for hours on end.

Anthony Bailey bought a shotgun about a month ago following an argument with his wife, Bradley said. Pretty soon Bradley was afraid to visit the house.

After an argument last month, Bailey chased his wife out of the home and fired his shotgun into the air, according to Bradley.

Bradley said he sat his stepson down for a talk. Bailey didn't want to listen.

"He just stood like a statue, staring straight ahead," Bradley said. "I told him he needed to get help, and he said there was no way to help him."

Wednesday afternoon, Bradley walked toward the burned bungalow where his grandchildren died and where teddy bears from mourners adorned the front porch. He collapsed in grief into the arms of friends near the front porch.

"It started getting bad, and it just went from bad to worse," said Bradley, who said he kept in contact with Essie Bailey after she left.

Bradley said his stepson constantly called Essie Bailey at Botsford Hospital, where she worked as a nurse's aide. The harassment got to a point where she took out a restraining order against him.

Police said the couple had restraining orders against each other.

Michigan Department of Corrections records indicate Essie Bailey is on probation in connection with a domestic violence charge. She pleaded guilty to aggravated domestic violence stemming from a May 30 incident, and was sentenced to one year of probation on July 16.

"There has been some indication that there has been some abuse in the family between the husband and the wife," Hall-Beard said, adding that Anthony Bailey has a few minor arrests. "As far as we know, he never served any time in state prison."

Margaret Wasuikanis, who lives next door to the Bailey family, said the couple seemed very much in love when they moved in two years ago. Recently, she noticed Essie Bailey wasn't around.

"I asked one of the girls how the mother was and she told me, 'She's not here any more,' " Wasuikanis said.

In hindsight, Wasuikanis said, a Sunday conversation with Anthony Bailey was forewarning.

"I saw him outside and he said, 'I'm about to go crazy,' " she said. "I asked him if he was all right, and he said, 'I don't know.' "

Wasuikanis, who has lived in her home for 41 years, called the Baileys the "best neighbors we've ever had."

She said Anthony Bailey shoveled her walk and offered rides to the hospital when her husband was sick.

"He was so helpful and so mindful of the children," she said. "This is such a surprise, such a shock."

Two weeks ago, she noticed all four children in the yard where they often played, and offered to take their picture.

"They were so excited; they said, 'Oh, yeah,' " she said, showing off a snapshot of the older girls, holding their younger siblings.

"I gave them most of the pictures last week. It pleased them so much. They thought that was a big thing, me taking their pictures."
