Cops search park for missing boy

Detroit police and other law enforcement officials searched a secluded wooded area in Hines Park on Thursday, looking for clues in the 5-year-old case of a missing boy, D'Wan Sims.

They found some bones and other items, which they declined to identify, which will be sent to a laboratory to be analyzed. The park area, which is located in Dearborn Heights, is roughly between where D'Wan lived in Detroit and where he disappeared, at Wonderland Mall in Livonia.

D'Wan's mother, Dwanna Jackson, told police on Dec. 11, 1994 that she and her son walked through the doors of the Target department store, heading toward the food court, when she noticed D'Wan had vanished. In the weeks that followed, law enforcement officials conducted one of southeast Michigan's most intensive searches. D'Wan, who would be 9 now, has not been found.
